It has been said that the fund-raising has been aroused in the Herald popular thing in human interest islarity contest may be attributed. fight, and it is probably to this fact. This natural interest in a scrim- tial and the wonderful interest which made is greatly increased in the contest from the fact that practically every person in the city is a partisan of some one or the other of the candidates and doing everything possible that success may be at hand.

The speculative spirit continues very active, and it may truly be said that the diamond contest is being more vivaciously discussed in this city than has any other topic in years. The contest—wise and otherwise ones are still very much in evidence with their predictions concerning the final outcome, which are of an infinite and bewildering variety.

The progress of the contest is not only marked by a widespread speculative spirit, but by strenuous activity in a vote-getting way as well. Many of the contestants are combining generalship with their work of vote-getting, and it may be believed that this will prove a powerful factor in determining the winners.

The official standing shows that up until 5:30 last evening there had been a total of 108,890 votes cast for these candidates whose names appear on the list.

Of this large number of votes the ladies have received 51,313, and the gentlemen 57,577. From these figures it appears that there has been 6,264 more votes cast for the gentlemen than for the ladies, and in as much as there has been a lady's vote issued with every gentleman's vote issued many are unable to explain the discrepancy.

Only eight more working days remain until the close of the contest and every candidate realizes that in order that they may attain success they must pile up subscription votes in big bunches as subscription getting is becoming more strenuous day by day and will continue so until the

CONCERNING CITY'S MORALITY

The Rev. Mr. Yeuell has made some statements in regard to the morality of Greencastle during his series of meetings at the Christian church which have been misquoted on the streets; then I have been given as the authority for the remarks. Now I have had two conversations with Mr. Yeuell. He happened to be at the court-room on the day I, acting as the attorney for the Board of Children's Guardians of Putnam County, had two girls under sixteen years of age made wards of the Juvenile Court, and, in the conversation that arose, Mr. Yeuell asked me some questions about the girls. I told him that I was the attorney for the Board of Children's Guardians of Putnam County, and, acting in such capacity, had learned of several cases where young girls between thirteen and sixteen had been seduced; that in the city of Greencastle and suburbs there were probably ten or fifteen cases; that the girls while poor belonged to respectable families; that the boys belonged to what are called good families. I told him that it was difficult to prove anything in regard to such matters for the reason that while the girls would talk, tell of other girls who had done as they had done, yet it was impossible to get them to make an affidavit against any of the young men.

I told him of the work of the Board of Children's Guardians; that it acted in every case where it could get any positive evidence and gave him an account of our work within the last six months. It seems that Mr. Yeuell made some statements about what I had told him and what others had told him; and it is generally reported that he said Greencastle is the most immoral city of its size in the State of Indiana. This statement Mr. Yeuell positively denies. I am certain that I made no such statement, nor did I express any opinion on this point at all, simply gave him the facts above set out. I was acting strictly in the line of my duty; I thought as the law seemed to be unable to reach the evil that the church might eradicate it. Besides, I have found so few people interested in such matters that when the Judge of the Juvenile Court made these two young girls wards I could not cite him to any good persons in their neighborhood to be sponsors for them and I thought publicly might get more persons awakened to this evil in our midst. The parents of these boys and girls should know what they are doing. The good people of the city should accept the facts as they can be proven to be and set about to remedy them. I am ready and willing to tell any one specifically what I know. If the citizens will co-operate with the Board of Children's Guardians and bring this matter before the Judge of the Putnam Circuit Court sitting as a Judge of the Juvenile Court this blot on the name of Greencastle can speedily be wiped out.

But somebody must do something. Certainly no good can be done by concealing the facts. If the parents of these girls will get them to make affidavits to the facts the present conditions of immorality will soon end. I do not want to be quoted as authority except on the above facts. I do not desire any publicity, or any one's enmity, but I am willing to take my share of criticism when I am acting in the line of my duty as attorney for the County Board of Children's Guardians and am willing to do all in my power to break up this immoral practice in our community. I am ready and willing to stand by what I have said and give it the widest publicity in the hope that what is known by all will be the concern of all and our evil in the end will cease to exist. Let us stop criticizing and bickering and get together and do something to save these children and after that is accomplished we can have more time for personal differences. I recommend that the good people of Greencastle meet and form a Society for the Suppression of Vice to take up such cases as the ones under consideration and others, then Greencastle will be, not the most immoral, but the most moral city in the State of Indiana.

FRANCE HEARS OF FOUR BANKS

Letters from New York to the Journal, of Paris, speaks of Greencastle as of Great Importance in the Late Plurty.

HAS A SPLENDID REPUTATION

A letter written by the New York correspondent of the Paris Journal, and translated by Miss Minnetta Taylor, gives Greencastle high place in the financial world. The letter is as follows:

"The financial stringency in the United States still exists though an amelioration is promised. The causes of the trouble seem to be speculation on the part of the banks; a movement to discredit Roosevelt's administration by a financial panic, in order to elect a trust candidate as 'safe and sane'; an attempt to frighten the public from understanding and regulating the corporations; and the usual desire to make money by causing a commotion in stocks.

"One of the interesting features is the resistance by some banks to the decrees of the Clearing House limiting payment on checks. The state of Indiana is prominent in this and especially Greencastle, Indiana. This is not a large city but is important in this regard because the president of one of the banks, R. L. O'Hair, has been president of the Bankers' Association. The banks in this town are paying depositors' checks in full and meeting all their obligations as usual. This looks responsible, sensible and honest, helps to hold up the credit of banking and will get returns in the gratitude and reliance of patrons who reason that confidence should have some tangible basis. I have written you that the Middle West and South are the only really American parts of the United States. Here you have an evidence of the initiative and practical sense formerly attributed to the nation.

The case is being tried before Judge Rawley and without a jury. The plaintiff is represented by B. F. Corwin, while the defendants have as their attorneys Messrs. Knight, Littleton, T. C. Grooms, John James, and Dowden.

THE YEUELL MEETINGS

Another powerful plea for an acceptance of Christ Evangelist Yeuell offered at the Christian church last night. His sermon theme was "Prepare to Meet Thy God."

He called attention to the singer ready to meet nearly all comers but who finally failed before a great voice, then came the picture of John L. Sullivan, ready for all but Jas. J. Corbett before whom he finally was vanquished.

"You men and women here tonight are ready for all the ordinary emergencies of life. You have intelligence, culture, kindness of disposition, sympathy of heart so far as earthly things go but are you prepared to meet your God?"

"There is no reason why the kingdom of Heaven should not be right at hand today. The judgement day could come just exactly as well now as thousands of years hence. All the great wars of earth have been described in the Bible, all its great epochs and crucial points in history. There is no reason under heaven why you might not be called to stand before the great white throne tomorrow as well as to expect to be called from your grave in a thousand years.

"You can not afford to pass a single opportunity by.

"I recall Moody telling of a night in Chicago when he extended but a short invitation and then told the audience to go away and come back again the following night. The great Chicago fire raged that night and that audience never again was assembled together. Moody gave his promise to God then and there that he never again would dismiss an audience without giving them ample opportunity to accept Christ."

As was evident the night before men and women all over the church were profoundly impressed. Evidences of religious conviction were plenty. At the close of the service there was little talking, conversational groups did not form as usual, and men and women went quietly to their homes.

The service begins at 7 o'clock tonight.

THE KENTUCKY SITUATION.

As the figures relative to the Republican victory in Kentucky are made public, the fact that it was not a Republican victory but a Democratic gift becomes more apparent. The Republicans did not make a large gain. The Democrats, disgruntled over internal affairs, simply remained away from the polls. When the presidential election comes off these Democrats will be found at the polls voting the straight Democratic ticket. An analysis of the figures are interesting. Four years ago Beckham received 229,000 votes as opposed to the 202,000 of Belknap, the Republican candidate for governor. This year Hagar, the Democratic candidate received only 193,000 as against 210,000 for Wilson, the Republican candidate. The Democrats lost 33,000 while the Republicans gained only 8,000, and nearly all these in Louisville, on an open town campaign. Few Democrats voted the Republican ticket—they could not bring themselves to do that. But they could express their dissatisfaction with existing conditions by refusing to vote at all. With the right man and the true Democratic principles as issues at the next election Kentucky will be found in the same old Democratic camp. But the right man and the right issue must be present to satisfy modern Democracy. It is not a machine party, and there is no machine thinking.

Willie and the Whumps.

By W. F. BRYAN.

Copyright, 1907, by M. M. Cunningham.

"What are whumps?" demanded William, his infant soul thirsting for information.

"Whumps," replied Tim Mason, "are beings like men, but they are all clock-work inside."

"That winds up?" interrupted Willie.

"With a big key," assented Mason with inspiration. "They steal little boys and make the little boys wind them up every half hour day and night. When the little boys are so tired that they can't wind any more they eat them and then steal some more little boys."

"Clocks don't eat," scoffed the infant scientist.

"You have to oil them, don't you?" demanded Tim. "That's it," he went on as Willie nodded assent. "They only eat very fat little boys."

Willie glanced at his own plump person and then looked up in alarm. "Can they run fast—faster'n me?" he demanded.

"How fast can you run?" demanded Tim, with a glance at the oval path around the lawn. Accepting the hint, Willie traversed the oval as rapidly as his pudgy feet could carry him.

"They can run three times as fast as that," declared Tim. "Come to think it over, some of the whumps can run three and a half times faster."

"Then I won't run away into the woods again," promised Willie, and he trotted solemnly around the corner of the house to play in the sand heap in the back yard.

Bess Farley dimpled deliciously as he disappeared.

"It was all I could do to keep my face straight," she said, with a laugh. "I don't think we will lose Willie again as long as we stay in camp. It was an inspiration, Tim, but what would the president say?"

"I'd go to join the nature fakirs," was the laughing reply; "but, at any rate, I shall not have to waste afternoons hunting for Willie that might be far more pleasantly spent on the porch with his sister. Getting lost in the woods eight times in two weeks betokens that the wanderlust is becoming a habit with the youthful William."

"A habit to be checked only by the whumps," assented Bess. "Let's walk as far as the spring and see if we can see any of the curious beasts. I suppose I need fear no danger?"

She glanced complacently at her slender outlines, and Mason smiled. "You wouldn't grease one pinion of one wheel of a whump," he said. "So let us pursue the whumps to their lair."

Together they left the camp and pushed into the woods—those woods which so irresistibly attracted Bess Farley's small brother. It was Willie's first season in camp, and his voyage of exploration invariably resulted in lost bearings and a rescue party. Confident that the fabulous whumps would keep the youngsters at home, Tim and Bess made their way to the spring with no thought of Willie. But his sand toys soon palled upon the boy, and his active mind sought fresh employment. He wandered over to the edge of the inviting woods and gazed lovingly into the cool green pastures.

In the trees the squirrels chattered, and he could hear the frogs croaking solemnly in the marsh just beyond the road. Perhaps if he was very cautious he might evade the dreaded whumps. He was such a little fellow, he might be able to hide if they chanced his way.

There was a lovely big green bullfrog in the marsh. Perhaps even now he was sitting on a tuft of grass fairly begging a small boy to throw stones at him. With the delightful feeling of adventure Willie cast discretion to the wind and slipped into the shady spaces.

But no big frog was amiably waiting to become a target. Willie could hear them croaking, but not even a baby frog offered itself to his aim, and the boy wandered on. He found a new charm in the woods, since at any moment he might be called upon to flee from a whump, and he pressed onward.

Suddenly his heart stood still for one awful instant. From the bushes just beyond came a sound of voices suddenly raised in hue and cry. Willie dodged behind the bush, scarcely daring to breathe lest his respirations bring about his discovery, but the sounds died away in the distance, and, growing bolder, Willie crept forward and beheld the lair of the whumps.

It was a rather inviting spot, not at all what one would expect in the clock-work beasts. Three white tents were pitched in a little glade opening to the lake. On the shore were boats and canoes, while about the tents were easy chairs of rustic manufacture.

The only fearful object was a kettle swinging from a tripod over the fire. This probably contained the last victim of the whumps' cannibalistic tendencies, and Willie shuddered as he thought how narrowly he had escaped a similar fate. He was still congratulating himself upon his safety when without warning some of the whumps burst in to the open, and Willie's blood chilled as he saw that they bore as captives Bess and Tim. The latter were brave. They were both laughing and joking and trying to pretend that they did not care, but that was all make believe, Willie knew.

One of the whumps forced Bess into a chair and another forced upon her a reddish drink that they drew from a bottle submerged in the spring. That must be poison that they gave their victims to render them unconscious. One dreadful little moment Willie hesitated, then he burst into the open. "Please, Mr. Whump!" he called, precipitating himself upon the man who was trying to make his sister drink. "Please don't kill Bess! Let her go and take me. I'll wind you up. Honest I will. You don't want her. She is such a skinny thing."

A roar of laughter greeted his appearance, and Bess blushed redly at his personal allusion. The campers were puzzled, but in French Mason explained the bugbear that had been created to keep Willie out of the woods.

"It's a shame to tease him," cried Bess, touched by the boy's willingness to sacrifice himself for her. "These are not whumps, Willie."

"Yes, they are," he insisted. "I can hear the clockwork ticking." He was clinging to the leg of Bess' captor, Jim Brace, and after one quick glance the biggest of the whumps caught the situation. "He hears Brace's dollar watch," he explained as he rolled in the grass in his glee and his fellows howled with delight. That dollar watch had been a standing joke ever since they had come in camp.

Brace smiled as a sudden thought struck him. "I am a whump," he admitted. "I am the chief, or mug whump. There is but one means of escape from my awful power. It is well known that whumps never eat persons who are married or engaged to be married. I must ask this lady if she is a bride or a bride to be."

"Neither," said Bess firmly, with a defiant glance at Tim. She knew that the boat club boys had guessed Tim's admiration for her. Indeed, it was an open secret to all. When the boat club boys had caught sight of the pair making their way to the spring and had laughingly captured them and carried them off to camp she had been rather glad of the interruption, for Tim for the hundredth time had been pleading his cause. She liked him—to herself she confessed that she loved him—but she was unwilling to assent to an engagement. This seemed painfully like a forced issue.

But Willie was determined to save her life. "You can be engaged," he insisted, with a glance at Tim. "Please, Bess, for my sake." "And mine, too," pleaded Tim, leaning against the chair. "Please, dear," Bess looked at Brace. "I am engaged," she said to the mug whump.

When the cheering had subsided and every one had shaken hands with Tim, Brace turned to Willie.

"In consideration of the great service you have rendered one of our members," he said solemnly, "I as mug whump tender you the freedom of the forest. You will not even have to wind my watch, which is an all day job for a grown man."

"I'm so glad," said Willie beamingly, and Bess and Tim silently echoed the sentiment.

A Kaffir and a Beating.

Just as a Kaffir is slow in locating pain which is being experienced in his own body, so is he slow in imagining what others are suffering. A grownup Kaffir related, says Dudley Kidd in "Savage Childhood," that when he was a child his father threatened him with a beating if he did something or other. The child was puzzled as to what sort of thing a beating might be, for, although he had often seen his bigger brothers beaten, his imagination was unable to work on the sight and reconstruct the experience of these others into terms of his own senses.

When his father threatened him, therefore, he simply laughed, for he had not the remotest idea of how a beating really felt. It took a very short time for the young gentleman to extend the boundaries of his knowledge.

Swift retribution followed the unpardonable sin of showing disrespect to his father. As the children go about entirely bare, there was no delay for preparation. The father took a stick and applied it vigorously, "according to directions," and with entire success.

"When the tears and smarting were over," said the Kaffir in his old age, "I sat down and thought it over. 'Well,' I said to myself, 'now I know what father means by a beating. I don't know what is the reason of it; but, anyhow, I know what sort of a thing a beating is.' I often laugh when I think how stupid I was before that."

Very Sympathetic.

The manager of a shop in Lewes stood in the doorway the other day when a man with a wooden leg and a crutch came along and said:

"I want you to do me a favor. I want to leave my leg with you for a few minutes and go around to the next street and work a house for half a crown. I've an idea that the folks are very sympathetic. If I go with one leg I am sure of it."

"Very well," said the shopkeeper. "Just leave your leg here, and I'll take care of it."

The wooden substitute was unstrapped and handed over, and the cripple used the crutch to help himself down the alley.

Five minutes later he rang the doorbell of a house in the next street, to have it opened by the man he had just seen.

"Wh-wh-what!" he gasped. "Very sympathetic family lives here," quietly replied the other. "You seem to have met with a sad loss, and I'm anxious to help you. Here is a wooden leg which may fit you."

The leg was handed over. The man sat down on the steps and strapped it on, and as he got up and stumped through the gate he said to himself: "I've heard of coincidences since I was a youngster, but this is the first one that ever hit me with both feet at once."—London Answers.

Many of the store fronts and interiors as well as the windows are taking on a very Christmas like appearance. Not only are beautiful and useful things massed in abundance, but evergreen, ivy and paper has been lavishly used to make beautiful as well as useful the whole of many stores. Shopping, as one lady put it, is doubly a pleasure this year for this reason.

P. W. Montgomery from south of town has a remarkable but true story to tell of the accomplishments of a trio of Indian Runner ducks at his farm. Mr. Montgomery states that he has received between seven hundred and eight hundred eggs from the three during the spring and summer, and that besides the eggs eaten he has hatched and raised over one hundred and fifty ducks. This makes the two hundred-eggs-a-year hen look like thirty cents. She is not in it in the egg producing business when compared with the Indian Runner duck.
